

NEWS RELEASE

For Immediate Release
May 23, 2007

Contact: Rick Medina
PRfect Media
(480) 706-6880

Overalls, Hardhat ... Computer?

Arizona Construction Workers Give New Meaning to 'Booting Up'

(Phoenix, AZ) Contractors all over the Valley will soon be kicking off their work boots and hanging up their hardhats to log on to the Internet. AZTrainingOnline is a new online Safety Trainer program - sponsored by the Arizona Contractors Association (ACA) - which will help prevent injuries and fatalities on worksites.

"For years, universities have been successfully using the Internet to offer online courses and now we are bringing that level of convenience to the workplace," said ACA Vice President Brett Jones.

AzTrainingOnline brings safety to the next level offering over 400 risk management courses, in five different languages, to ACA members and non-members alike. Subscribers will have access to the program from any computer with internet access, 24-hours a day. This allows companies to train their employees in a more interactive and cost-effective manner than ever before.

The courses are very diverse -- ranging from lab safety to emergency preparedness -- and are suitable for any industry with safety concerns. While many of the courses train workers on how to prevent injuries, others explain the steps that should be taken in case an emergency does occur.

"Safety is a top priority and although prevention is plan A, accidents do happen," added Jones. "Being prepared to handle an emergency will minimize injury and loss."

The ACA is the largest association in Arizona representing general contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, and service providers. The ACA is dedicated to promoting safety and prosperity in the construction community.

For more information regarding the online Safety Trainer, contact Rick Medina at PRfect Media (480) 706-6880 or visit www.AZTrainingOnline.com

#####